Small Merchant At 16, At 61 Gets $12 Million 25-Year Loan To Build Seventh Store In New York

A man who works for a Rockefeller handed a check for $12,000,000 to George Farkas so that he could purchase land from a corporation owned by a Kennedy.

With this transaction, Mr. Farkas, founder and chairman of Alexander's Department Stores, Inc., reached a peak in his career. For it was the final step prior to his starting construction of a department store on East 59th Street, says the New York Times, the first Alexander's store in Manhattan and the first new midtown Manhattan store built from the ground up since 1947.

The closing of the contract to buy land for the 400,000-square-foot store took place in October. A representative of the Chase Manhattan Bank, whose president is David Rockefeller, presented Mr. Farkas with a $12,000,000, 25-year loan to build the new store.

Mr. Farkas then turned around and gave $6,000,000 to the former owner of the property, the Ken Industries Corporation, controlled by the Joseph P. Kennedy family. The remaining $6,000,000 will be used for construction of the five-story building.

When Mr. Farkas opened the first Alexander's in the Bronx 25 years ago, he hardly dreamed that a store of his, with an expected volume of "at least $40,000,000" in its first year, would one day be built in the burgeoning East Side of Manhattan across the street from Bloomingdale's. The groundbreaking has been held.

As the bulldozers began to move in to build this store — scheduled to open by the spring of 1965 with generally higher price lines than Alexander's presently carries — he talked fondly of his new "flagship" store.

"We have six stores now but they are like six children without a mother," he says. "Now we will have a mother store."

When the original announcement of the purchase of the property for the store was made, Alexander's said that it had acquired 48,500 square feet on a T-shaped plot in the block surrounded by Lexington Avenue, Third Avenue, and East 58th and 59th Streets. The site has 225 feet of frontage on both 58th and 59th Streets, says the New York Times, with 37.3 feet jutting out to the middle of the Lexington Avenue block.

Since then, Mr. Farkas has made two additional purchases to enlarge his property. Alexander's first bought the corner of 58th Street and Lexington Avenue, so that it now owns about half of the Lexington Avenue block between 58th and 59th Streets. It has also acquired 26 feet on Third Avenue beginning at the northwest corner of 58th Street to give it frontage on all four streets on the block.

A seven-level store in mid-Manhattan is a far cry from a specialty shop in the Bronx that had only 4,500 square feet of selling space. Yet that was how George Farkas began his chain of ready-to-wear stores — a privately owned concern with sales, he says, of $145,000,000 in the year ended July 31, 1963.

Mr. Farkas was born on January 31, 1902, in Paterson, N. J. Soon thereafter, his family moved to New York City where he attended elementary schools and Townsend Harris High School. He also attended the New York University School of Retailing for a short period.

The son of a merchant, the Alexander's chairman was reared in a retailing-oriented family. His father owned two woman's specialty stores in Harlem where Mr. Farkas worked as a stock boy after school. The death of his father when Mr. Farkas was 16 years old forced him immediately into the retail world when he took over the family business.

After some abortive attempts to open stores of his own, Mr. Farkas established the first Alexander's in October, 1928, at Third Avenue and 152nd Street in the Bronx, says the New York Times. The store, which had a volume of $500,000 in its first year, was named after Mr. Farkas' father.

In the spring of 1929, the store was enlarged for the first of the 80 times that it was subsequently to be expanded. As Mr. Farkas recalls, "Fortunately I had to sell all of my stock before the crash to pay for this expansion. We were also small enough and flexible enough to survive and grow during the Depression."

Additional stores in the chain were opened in the following years. Another Bronx outlet was built at Fordham Road and Grand Concourse in 1938, which has since been expanded to 302,000 square feet, 10 times its original size. Then came a White Plains unit in 1956, a Rego Park, Queens, store in 1959 and two more stores last year — a 200,000-square-foot outlet at Milford, Conn., and a 270,000-square-foot store in Paramus, N. J.

What next for Alexander's? Mr. Farkas says, "We will continue to expand but only on a sound financial basis. We will go where the people are in the metropolitan New York area." For some time, Alexander's has contemplated opening major stores in Brooklyn and Westchester after the Manhattan store is operating.

Mr. Farkas, who walks faster and works longer than most of his associates at the age of 61, retains active control of his company's financial area. Recently, however, he has delegated many of the merchandising responsibilities to others. Nevertheless, he is personally involved in all major decisions made at the company he created.

Alexander's talks of its operation as one based on under-selling, which it considers to be one of the three basic types of retail department stores. In its view, there are the traditional stores, like Macy's and Gimbels, says the New York Times; discount stores, like Korvette or Two Guys from Harrison, and under-selling stores, which Alexander's executives say is their province.

Traits of the under-selling stores in the Alexander's lexicon include fashion merchandise at bargain prices and attractive interiors and exteriors. The stores operate on high turnover and low markups, which Mr. Farkas says are 15 to 20 per cent lower than in traditional department stores. There are no charge accounts and all sales are cash-and-carry.

Mr. Farkas, who admits that he wasn't the first to discover the

Fabulous U. S. Hard-Work Success Story Was Lived By Builder Of One Of World's Largest Hotels

Harry Grossinger, the man behind the scenes at one of the world's largest and best known resort hotels, Grossinger's of Sullivan County, died of an acute coronary thrombosis at Maimonides Hospital at Liberty, N. Y. His age was seventy-six years. He had been stricken in his quarters at the hotel early in the morning.

In the public eye, Mr. Grossinger was obscured by his wife, Jennie, who was the official hostess at the hotel. She is an outgiving person who probably knew, and called, more people by their first names than any full-time politician, says the New York Times. But intimates said it was Mr. Grossinger who actually ran the hotel, assisted in recent years by their son Paul as general manager.

Mr. Grossinger, for instance, did the buying for the hotel kitchen, going to New York's Washington Market twice a week in his chauffeur-driven, custom-built Continental limousine to inspect the vegetables and meat that would go into Grossinger's menus.

He also supervised the building of all the additions that had been raised during the last fifty years to the original seven-room farmhouse. He continued his activities even after a severe heart attack this year had sent him to a hospital in New York for several weeks.

Mr. Grossinger, like his widow, was born in Austria and came to the U.S. early in the century. He was a tailor by trade and worked for a time at his craft in New York, where he and Mrs. Grossinger were married in 1912. They were third cousins and her name also was Grossinger.

Her family operated a restaurant on the Lower East Side, with her father, Selig, as chef; her mother, Maike, a waitress; and Jennie as cashier. In 1914, when the father suffered a nervous breakdown, the family bought a small farm near Liberty and began taking in summer boarders. The first year there were nine and the Grossingers made a profit of $81. Harry Grossinger continued to work in New York.

The first addition (six rooms) was built in 1915, expanding the capacity to twenty guests, financed largely by Mr. Grossinger's earnings as production chief of a New York garment shop. The next year, as the hotel enterprise continued to prosper, says the New York Times, he left New York for Sullivan County to rejoin his wife and young son.

At the last count, Grossinger's had thirty-six buildings on 1,200 acres of rolling land accommodating a maximum of 1,400 guests. Its gross last year was eight million dollars. It has its own golf course, lake, ski slope, tennis courts, indoor and outdoor Olympic-size pools.

Grossinger's first began to gain international attention in the 1930's when Barney Ross trained there for his light-weight championship fights. Eight other world champions have trained at Grossinger's since, including Rocky Marciano, retired heavyweight champion.

Grossinger's also was the showcase for many entertainers, including Milton Berle, Abe Lyman, and Eddie Fisher. Mr. Fisher and Elizabeth Taylor, the actress, were married there.

Although the food is Kosher and the guests were largely Jewish in the early days, the clientele now is as varied as the activities. The Rev. Fred Gehring of Philadelphia, the "Padre of Guadalcanal," often is a guest there, as is Cardinal Spellman and Governor Rockefeller.

The official address of the hotel is "Grossinger, N. Y." It has its own post office.

Mr. Grossinger is survived by three sisters, and two brothers; Mrs. Rose Friedman, of Liberty; Mrs. Regina Pasin, of Jersey City; Mrs. Anna Hoffer, of Liberty; and Jack and Max Grossinger, of Chicago.

In addition to Jennie and Paul, their son, Mr. Grossinger is also survived by a daughter, Mrs. Elaine Etess, whose husband is a physician in Liberty, says the New York Times. A funeral service was held in Monticello, N. Y. Burial was in the family plot of the cemetery of Ahavath Israel Synagogue, in Liberty.

Harry was the sole owner of Grossinger's whose physical plant is valued at $15 million and whose good-will, thanks in large part to the charm of Jennie, his hostess wife, is valued in the billions, says the New York Herald Tribune. In his hip boots (for slogging around in the mud), his rough clothes and his broadbrimmed Stetson, Harry used to be on the job at 7 a.m. every day even though the doctors told him he'd better take it easy because of his bad heart.

Harry was a round-faced man with a cherubic look and a shiny bald head. Behind his steel-rimmed glasses he was a shy man and the guests didn't see much of him.

Before he died Harry was able to see his new building finished. It opened earlier this summer and it is called "Jennie G." Quentin Reynolds, incidentally, is working on a biography of Jennie G. Nobody is working on Harry's. Not long ago a long magazine piece mentioned Harry's name briefly only four times. That was the way Harry preferred it.

Grossinger's with its own post office, water supply, airport, ski center, night club, theater, 18-hole golf course, artificial skating rink, and its vast dining room, will continue. Harry's and Jennie's son, Paul, who has been general manager, will become administrative head, and Jennie will be there as usual.

It wasn't until 1934 that "the G" began to be fashionable in Broadway circles. In that year Barney Ross trained there for his welterweight title fight with Jimmy McLarnin. Ross was accompanied by a retinue of Broadway sports writers and columnists. They began to give plugs to Jennie and "the G" in their stories and stir up a brisk trade in the Broadway amusement world.

Damon Runyon, Hype Igoe, Louis Sobol, and Walter Winchell became habitues. Eddie Cantor was a fan. Soon the fame of Grossinger's transcended the New York

ISRAEL PRIORITY PROBLEM: IT'S THOSE FOREIGNERS AGAIN

Israel, whose Jewish population has confronted discrimination for centuries, is now faced with the problem among its own people. Racial tensions and charges of discrimination have resulted from the immigration into Israel of thousands of dark-skinned Oriental Jews from parts of Asia and Africa.

One social scientist recently described Israel as becoming a nation "divided into Europeans who 'run the show' and Orientals who are guided, spoon-fed, and shepherded by European managers," says the New York Herald Tribune.

The European Jews who helped found the nation and hold most of its key political and business positions now are a minority — about 40 per cent of Israel's population.

In recent years, the European Jews and the small number of Arabs have been joined by an influx of Jews from the Moslem nations of the Middle East and Northern Africa.

Most of these immigrants are backward by Western standards — their way of life in many cases was that of the small primitive Middle Eastern village. Handicapped by little modern education and few technical skills, they have in Israel become "hewers of wood and drawers of water." Friction between European and Oriental Jews often results simply because of the difference in backgrounds.

For a example, a Polish immigrant and his Moroccan neighbor recently were brought before a judge for fighting. It developed that their wives had quarreled over who was to sweep the staircase of their apartment house. The Moroccans had never lived in an apartment house before and could not understand why they should have to keep their stairway clean.

Israel's political leaders see increased education as a key to the solution of the nation's "racial problem," says the New York Herald Tribune. Deputy Prime Minister Abba Eban spoke of a "grave national crisis" developing if the cultural gap between the two Israels is not closed.

The problem is being given priority second only to the nation's concern over its military security against its Arab neighbors.

Steps include an extra year of kindergarten and tutoring in schools with a large percentage of Oriental children. Youth clubs have been launched to provide a place where students can do their homework under supervision.

Many of the Oriental parents are illiterate and unable to help their children with their studies.

"If there is discrimination in Israeli schools today," said a school principal from the Negev area, "it is against the Europeans. Standards of high school qualification examinations are deliberately lowered for Oriental children to encourage them to continue their studies. The assumption is that European parents don't need to be encouraged to send their children to high school."

However, last year only 10 per cent of the nation's high school graduates were Orientals, says the New York Herald Tribune. The education minister predicts it will be a slow, painful process to raise the level of the Oriental community.

Harry Eichler was best man. The ushers were: Irwin William Fefergrad, and Seymour Gladman, cousins of the bride; Ian Turner, Jerry Pollack, Irwin Tobenstein, and Eytam Beres. Michael Stephen Mandelcorn, aged four years, cousin of the bride, was ring-bearer. The wedding flowers were white, and pink gladioli, carnations, roses, and chrysanthemums. An orchestra played the wedding music. Three hundred and fifty guests were received in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Gurevitch, mother of the bride, wore a sleeveless, gown of ice-blue, silk peau de soie, beaded; with scoop neckline; cap sleeves; and sheath skirt made with slits at the sides. Each carried mauve orchids pinned to her purse. Mr. and Mrs. Larry Fishko spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y.; and in Lake George, N. Y., the bride departing in a white, knitted ensemble; with a corsage of white orchids. They have taken up residence at 80 Place Cote Vertu.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

WASSERMAN-GAITSKELL

A Canadian economist, Gordon Joshua Wasserman, aged twenty-six years, the son of John J. Wasserman, Q.C., and Dr. Rachel Chait Wasserman, of 513 Grosvenor Avenue, Montreal, married Miss Cressida Gaitskell, the twenty-two-year-old, younger daughter of the late Labor Party leader Hugh Gaitskell in suburban Hampstead, London, on August 4, first at a civil ceremony at Hampstead registry office. Later a Jewish ceremony was performed by Rabbi Isaac Levy, of Hampstead, in the Gaitskell's rambling old house, 18 Frognal Gardens, N.W., near Hampstead Heath.

Attending the ceremonies were Lady Gaitskell, recently created a life peeress after her husband's death in January, 1962; her other daughter Miss Julia Gaitskell; and the groom's parents.

"We were planning to get married sometime in the fall but I decided it would be a good idea to go ahead while my parents were on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Wasserman told a friend.

The couple met at a party in Oxford University two years ago and saw each other later in Canada while on independent visits. Mr. Wasserman, a 1959 Rhodes scholar, is a former editor of the McGill Daily. In his final year he won the Canadian University Press Award for editorial writing.

At Oxford he studied politics, philosophy, and economics at New College and got a high second. He now is a fellow of New College, where he lectures and does research for his doctor of philosophy thesis on economic planning in France.

His bride, who was studying at Oxford's Somerville College, learned that she passed her finals. She also was studying politics, philosophy and economics.

Mr. Wasserman plans to stay on at Oxford for the time being and the couple will live in a three-room apartment inside New College. This will break one of Oxford's oldest traditions: It's the first time married quarters have been opened up inside the college walls.

FUERSTENBERG-LIDSKY

The marriage of Miss Gloria Lidsky, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Lidsky, 4694 Mackenzie Street, to Adam Fuerstenberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fuerstenberg, 4545 Carlton Avenue, was solemnized at Zichron Kedoshim Synagogue, on Sunday, June 7, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Jacob J. Zlotnick, assisted by Cantor Moses Lam. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a fitted, white, organza gown, fashioned with a lace bodice; scoop neckline; short sleeves; and full skirt with a chapel train. Her tulle illusion veil was topped by a crown of seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a bouquet of white, and pink roses. Miss Ann Fuerstenberg, sister of the groom, was maid of honour, wearing a sleeveless, white, organza gown, with appliques of pink embroidery, made with a high neckline; and bell-shaped skirt; and a head-band of pink carnations; and carried a bouquet of those flowers. Misses Teba Friedman, and Marlene Singer were bridesmaids. Miss Friedman was in a sleeveless, pink chiffon gown, made with a full skirt. Miss Singer was in a sleeveless, pink, peau de soie gown, trimmed with matching lace; and a matching cape. Each had a matching head-band; and carried bouquets of pink carnations. Arnold Lidsky, brother of the bride, was best man. The ushers were: Kalman Miller, Allan Migicowsky, cousins of the bride; George Baumgarten, cousin of the groom; Issie Wolanski, Arieh Wolanski, Nathan Borenstein, and Morton Black. The wedding flowers were pink, and white carnations, and roses. Two hundred and fifty guests were received in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Lidsky, mother of the bride, wore a pink, peau de soie gown, embroidered with beads, and its own beaded jacket; and a pink, beaded head-band. Mrs. Fuerstenberg, mother of the groom, in a sleeveless, pink, chiffon gown, with a beaded bodice, had an open, pill-box hat. Their flowers were corsages of pink orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Adam Fuerstenberg spent their wedding trip at Kutsher's Country Club, in Monticello, N. Y., the bride going away in a yellow, silk ensemble. They have taken up residence in Toronto, Ont. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. S. Lidsky, of Miami Beach, Florida, grandparents of the bride; F. Zissman, great-uncle of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Michael Zissman, cousins of the groom; all of Newark, N. J.; Mrs. R. Zissman, great-aunt of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. George Zissman, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Einhorn; all of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Friedman, and Gary, and Linda, of Colonia, N. J., all cousins of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. S. Mintz, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Y. Kurtz, of New York; Mrs. Regina Paminer, of Israel; Mr. and Mrs. H. THE RELATIONSHIP OF THE CRIMINAL CODE OF CANADA AND FREE SPEECH on sedition the following paragraph:

Everyone who publishes or circulates or causes to be published or circulated orally or in writing any matter intended or calculated to incite violence or provoke disorder against any class of persons or against any person as a member of any class in Canada shall be guilty of any indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for two years.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was quite right. In the common law, which we share, there is regard, under the provisions relating to sedition, for relationship between groups. I would like to quote from Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, article 114, 8th edition. I am just quoting an extract. Stephen said:

A seditious intention is an intention to bring into hatred or contempt . . . or to incite any person to commit any crime in disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection among His Majesty's subjects, or to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of such subjects.

We have lost that in our code. The hon. member for Peace River felt that the common law took care of that particular aspect of sedition; but the opinions I have brought here today of Mr. Robinette, Mr. Maloney and others maintain that the common law crime no longer exists within our law because of the Criminal Code.

There is another section with which the hon. member for Peace River dealt, and that was section 168, spreading false news. I pointed out in my address in this house on March 2 that the crime of spreading false news is too vague in dealing with the question of public interest. I will read section 168:

THE RELATIONSHIP OF THE CRIMINAL CODE OF CANADA AND FREE SPEECH

Every one who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

It is the opinion of these legal authorities that by failing to define "public interest" the usefulness of this section, in this particular context, is very seriously limited. It is the opinion of the attorney general of Ontario, according to press reports, and it is certainly the opinion of Mr. Robinette and Mr. Maloney, that this section is not effective in view of the fact that the term "public interest" is not defined.

I do not feel it would be a radical departure from our law to define "public interest" in terms which would make it effective in dealing with this particular matter. The Canadian Jewish Congress have suggested adding these two paragraphs to section 166 of the Criminal Code:

Injury or mischief to a public interest shall include statements intended or calculated for the promotion of hatred, contempt or hostility against a group of persons by reason of their particular race, nationality or ethnic origin, colour or religion.

The second paragraph is:

No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section by reason only of having published statements relating to controversial social, economic, political or religious beliefs or opinions.

It is my contention, and the contention of these briefs and submissions, that the right of free speech must not be abridged; that the right of debate must be protected: but within the tradition of our law by these changes, as suggested, effective means could be legislated to enable the courts to deal with the particular problem.

Another suggestion made by the Canadian Jewish Congress is that section 153 of the Criminal Code should be amended. The hon. member for Peace River stated he felt that under section 153 the term "scurrilous" would be sufficient to deal with literature which is being distributed. These other authorities do not agree with the hon. member for Peace River. It is suggested that section 153 should read as follows:

Every one commits an offence who makes use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering anything that is obscene, indecent, immoral or scurrilous or contains material a principal purpose of which is to promote hatred of or hostility against a group of persons by reason of their particular race, nationality or ethnic origin, colour or religion, but this section does not apply to a person who makes use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering anything mentioned in subsection (4) of section 151.

They suggest the following paragraph also be added:

No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section by reason of making use of the mails only for the purpose of transmitting or delivering statements the primary purpose of which is to examine controversial social, political, economic subjects or religious beliefs or opinions.

Mr. Speaker, there is another importance to these changes. It is that our Criminal Code must express our ideas of law, our ideas of our society; it must express our social ideals. If it is lacking in these particulars as an expression of our social outlook, our view of society, our conception of law, then our code should be strengthened.

It is very important that our code represent the ideals for which we stand. This is part of our tradition. The universal declaration of human rights, the various declarations made by members of this house and the courts of law of this country all stand for these social ideals which I believe would be more adequately expressed if these changes were made in our Criminal Code.

There is another importance of our Criminal Code. The Criminal Code is a great educator, and I believe that by strengthening it as I have suggested, it would be a more important beacon for the people of Canada.

In this age of struggle and turmoil, of great hatreds that are convulsing our society, it seems to me we should look at this question in terms of the society in which we live today, not of 80 or 90 years ago, and express more adequately those things for which we stand.

We all have great admiration for the people in the United States who are fighting for civil rights for Negro citizens, and the leadership of people like Martin Luther King who have put forward a non-violent protest with great distinction and great spiritual leadership not only to the people of the United States but to all of us who believe in these things.

amusement world, says the New York Herald Tribune. It became international, and it now draws many guests from England, France, Austria, and even Australia.

In the main building at Grossinger's there is a Wall of Faces, a gallery containing the photographs of 1,000 celebrities who have stopped at "the G". "Absolutely everybody who is anybody has his picture there," a G-man said, and began to tick them off: Leonard Bernstein, Bobby Kennedy, Alben Barkley, Elizabeth Taylor, Kim Novak, Herman Wouk, Elia Kazan, Nelson Rockefeller, Francis Cardinal Spellman, Mayer Wagner, Ralph Bunche . . . Why, just the other day Roger Maris and Whitey Ford were here."

Candidates for state office customarily stop off at "the G" on their electioneering tours and even national candidates have dropped in. When Henry Cabot Lodge began his campaign for the Vice-Presidency in 1960 his first stop was at Grossinger's. He was accompanied by Gov. Rockefeller.

Numerous stage, screen and television performers got their start at "the G's" nightclub. Among them are Shelley Winters, Eddie Fisher, Red Buttons, Sam Levenson, Robert Merrill, and Leslie Uggams.

In the winter Grossinger's guests are mostly from the New York metropolitan area, but in the summer most of them come from farther away. Though the hotel observes Jewish dietary laws, many of its guests nowadays are not Jewish. National corporations like General Electric and Motorola hold conventions there, says the New York Herald Tribune, and this business accounts for a quarter of "the G's" income.

The Farkases have four sons. The oldest, Alexander, known on Seventh Avenue as Sandy, is president of Alexander's. Another son, Bruce, is secretary of the company. Robin works for the research concern of Arthur D. Little, Inc., in Boston; and Jonathan attends high school in New York.

Mr. Farkas lives in Manhattan and is an avid art collector. He is an active supporter of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies; and his wife is acting president of Beth Abraham Home, a home in the Bronx for the chronically ill.

Again this year, as last year, Mr. Farkas will open the Fordham Road store on a Sunday before Christmas when, with the aid of employe volunteers, residents of many hospitals and homes for the aged and infirm in the Bronx can shop quietly to their hearts' content, says the New York Times. All money taken in during these special sale days is donated by Alexander's to the places where these shoppers live.

The Relationship Of The Criminal Code Of Canada And The Rights Of Free Speech; And Proposals By The Canadian Jewish Congress

Discussed in the House Of Commons by Marvin Gelber, of Toronto, Member For York South

Neshoba county negro church in Mississippi was burned to the ground on June 21, 1964. Three civil rights students, Michael Schwerner, aged 24, Andrew Goodman, aged 20, James Chaney, aged 21, vanished on first assignment investigating destruction of the church. After arrest for allegedly speeding, they were released and subsequently disappeared. The gutted shell of a station wagon was found ditched near Bogue Swamp outside Philadelphia, Mississippi. Some days later, the lower torso of a white youth, with feet bound, was found in the swamp. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the F.B.I., believes they are dead.

The problem we are dealing with in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is larger than the problems which are encompassed within this house and our country. In its larger horizons today the great struggle is the struggle over colour. We have a great revolution which is engulfing our universe. Just concluded is the recent conference of commonwealth prime ministers in which the question of colour played a very important role. At this conference this country and other members of the commonwealth pursued the diplomacy of active understanding.

Today we are examining a bill which raises important topics concerning the relationship of the Criminal Cole of Canada and the rights of free speech. I spoke on this topic in this house during the throne speech debate on March 2, when I raised the point that the sections on free speech were matured in a society very different from our own.

We live in a highly articulated society where the mass media of communication are very well organized and where the merchandisers of opinion are using all sorts of scientific techniques to mould that opinion.

It seems to me that the arguments of John Stuart Mill which remain very important in terms of civil liberties and the right of free speech are not totally relevant to our society where tens of millions are daily subject to mass merchandising by people who have studied scientifically the process of influencing public opinion. The goldfish bowl of Hyde Park is not relevant to 20th century Canada, and the Socratic debate with which John Stuart Mill was dealing does not reflect the problem of influencing public opinion in our society.

I want to read two quotations from Dean Ivan Rand. As Mr. Justice Rand he delivered one of the most important opinions in the Roncarelli case, which had a great deal to do with our law relating to libel. In his memorable judgment he said this:

Freedom of thought and speech and disagreement in ideas and beliefs, on every conceivable subject, are of the essence of our life. The clash of critical discussion on political, social and religious subjects has too deeply become the stuff of daily experience to suggest that mere ill-will as a product of controversy can strike down the latter with illegality.

Recently Dean Rand retired as dean of the law school of the University of Western Ontario. In a dispatch to the Toronto daily Star he is quoted as follows:

The 80-year-old retiring dean of the University of Western Ontario law school continued: "We are in danger of becoming fanatical about individual rights".

Recognition of responsibilities, he said, is endangered by the continued assertion of the rights of individuals.

"We must accept either the rule of reason or the rule of passion — of hatred. I sometimes wish we could forbid the importation of these hatreds from other countries".

Mr. Rand also said: "In this country we are obsessed with the notion that any departure from tradition is fraught with danger. The first objective in this country should be a reconciliation of clashing demands and ideals. When we achieve this objective, we shall be making headway, but we mustn't be in too much of a hurry: Advances are slow to become part of tradition".

In this debate we have heard a number of excellent speeches. We had the address of the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) who introduced the bill, as well as the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) who seconded it. Then we had a fine speech from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and two speeches from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) I want to deal with the latter two speeches.

I was impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. In talking of group libel he said that "if our laws are not satisfactory in that respect they should be amended".

The hon. member for Peace River quoted a number of sections of the Criminal Code which he felt would deal with the cases mentioned by my hon. friend from Cartier, cases which have concerned this house and deal with the dissemination of vicious literature. The hon. member for Peace River felt that the existing Criminal Code could deal adequately with these problems. He quoted a number of sections from the Criminal Code.

I want to say that at the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) the Canadian Jewish Congress asked for two independent legal opinions, one from Mr. John J. Robinette and the other from Mr. Arthur Maloney, a former member of this house. They have examined each of the sections, except one which was mentioned by the hon. member for Peace River, and they do not feel that the wording of these sections is adequate in the circumstances.

One section which is not examined is section 166 of the Criminal Code, and the hon. member for Peace River himself had very strong doubts about its relevancy.

A point made by the hon. member for Peace River with which I should like to deal is this. He said that the common law could deal with these particular problems which we are facing. The Boucher case restricted very narrowly the conception of sedition, and the opinion of Mr. Robinette and that of Mr. Arthur Maloney is that the common law does not apply in view of section 8, since the Criminal Code deals with sedition.

In my earlier remarks in the throne speech debate I suggested that we should look at the code and within the tradition of our law make certain changes which will deal with these particular problems. I should like to refer to a proposal put before the government by the Canadian Jewish Congress in order to make it possible to apply this particular section dealing with sedition to the existing circumstances. They proposed that there be added to the section

The Rabbi's Dilemma In The Intermarriage Problem

By Rabbi David M. Eichhorn, of the National Jewish Welfare Board; address given at a Conference on Intermarriage, of the American Jewish Congress

Whatever be our approach to the matter of intermarriage and whatever be our opinion about the worthwhileness of Jewish survival, surely there is no doubt that intermarriage is presenting an increasingly serious challenge to the survival of the Jewish religion and the Jewish group in the United States.

Dr. Erich Rosenthal's recent study indicates that the intermarriage rate in the city of Washington, D.C., is now about 13 per cent of all marriages involving a Jewish person; and that in the state of Iowa, from the years 1958 to 1959, it constituted about 42 per cent of such marriages. A religious sampling of some 65,000 American families, made by the Bureau of the Census in 1959, indicated that the incidence of Jewish intermarriage for the United States as a whole is about ten per cent.

From such studies as these and from our own personal knowledge, gained from our daily labors in and with the Jewish community, we know that the prospect of a steady increase in the number of intermarriages among American Jews has already passed beyond the state of probability and presents a situation which must be faced resolutely, intelligently, and realistically by those interested in the survival of the American Jewish community.

Nevertheless, I think it can be said that none of us who subscribes to Jewish survival favors mixed marriages as a way of "solving the Jewish problem." None of us wishes to encourage the marriage of Jews to those of other religious faiths. All of us believe that, wherever possible, Jews should marry Jews.

At the same time, we recognize that, despite whatever we may believe or feel, many Jews will continue to marry individuals not of our faith. Among the practical questions raised by these common attitudes are: What measures should be taken within the Jewish group to stop the present trend toward a higher incidence of intermarriages? And, wherever such measures fail and a specific intermarriage is about to become or becomes a reality, how should the Jewish group handle the impending or existing intermarriage?

Whenever one of our religious persuasion becomes involved in a romance with a non-Jew, many Jews, perhaps most Jews, react in a manner which is as strongly tinged with emotion as with reason. This problem-area is, indeed, one which is extremely delicate as well as extremely complicated.

After close and careful study of this matter for more than thirty years, I am convinced that there are no pat answers or solutions, either inside Jewish tradition or outside of it, for all the problems that lead to or arise from intermarriage situations. The wise rabbi, marriage counsellor, and/or sociologist will attempt to study each case in the light of its own particular background and circumstances before making any value-judgments or action-recommendations.

Any attempt to impose a set of absolute "Thou shalt's" or "Thou shalt not's" upon this delicate human fabric, woven from subtle skein of reason, emotion, passion, and prejudice, will serve only to increase the number of parents who will become estranged from their children, the number of unhappy individuals who will be forced to seek the couch of the psychiatrist, the number of wrecked homes and ruined lives.

I do not favor nor would I knowingly encourage mixed marriages, first, because I am firmly committed to the perpetuation of the Jewish religion and the Jewish people (and mixed marriages constitute a threat to the perpetuation of each); and, second, because I am convinced that the happiest marriages are those in which the husband and wife come from as similar backgrounds as possible. But I try as well as I can to keep my disapproval and discouragement within the bounds of reason.

Happy marriages are not easy to come by. They are not nearly as numerous as the Pollyannas of the world would have us believe. A happy marriage involves not only the difficult task of adjusting oneself to the physical and emotional processes of one of the opposite sex; it also includes a mating of divergent minds and environments, a fusion of disparate educational, social, cultural, financial and religious backgrounds. Difference of religion is only one of a considerable number of conditioning factors which may cause unhappiness in marriage.

Religious homogeneity in family life is very essential, if one wishes to rear children who are mentally and emotionally stable. Most rabbis attempt to provide for such homogeneity by insisting that the non-Jew convert to Judaism before the rabbi will consent to officiate at the marriage ceremony.

In addition to being a direct violation of the traditional Halacha, which many of these rabbis claim as their guide, this procedure has unpleasant ethical and psychological aspects. It amounts to forcing a person to convert to Judaism under duress and it results, in many instances, in the production of a hypocritical convert.

While I believe most firmly that Judaism is, traditionally and inherently, a proselytizing religion, I believe just as firmly that no convert should be accepted who does not come to us in utmost sincerity, and completely voluntarily. At the same time, I am determined to do what I can to keep the Jewish group intact, not to drive any Jews away from Judaism, but, on the contrary, to seek to increase our numbers and to strengthen our religious fellowship.

Therefore I will officiate at a marriage between a Jew and a non-Jew without requiring the non-Jew to convert to Judaism, provided that I am assured that the children will be reared as Jews and given a Jewish religious education; that the Jewish religion will be the only religion practiced in the home; and that the home life will conform in all respects to what the children are taught in the Jewish religious school.

Are the children of such marriages Jews? The Central Conference of American Rabbis has taken the position that, if these children attend a Jewish religious school faithfully, their Bar Mitzva, Bas Mitzva, or Confirmation ceremonies are to be considered the equivalent of conversion, and thereafter they are to be regarded as Jews in the fullest sense. This position will, of course, not be acceptable to those traditional Jews who insist that one is not a Jew unless he had a Jewish mother or has been converted k'das u'ch'din.

Rabbi Bernard J. Bamberger wrote an article in the CCAR Journal (April 1963), in which he stated that those rabbis who do not insist on conversion of the non-Jew but require a promise that the children be raised as Jews are violating the principle of freedom of conscience more acutely and painfully than those rabbis who require conversion. Rabbi Bamberger is entitled to his opinion, but it does not conform to my own experience in this matter.

I always ask the mixed marriage couples who come to me whether they consider my requests unreasonable. Invariably, they reply that they do not. In practically every instance they assure me that the determination to rear their children as Jews was reached before they decided to get married by a rabbi. The promises that I require seem to them to flow logically from these major decisions which were made before I entered the picture.

The principal grievance which non-Jews have against the prevailing Jewish marriage-method is the rabbinic insistence upon conversion of the non-Jew before marriage.

By placing the emphasis upon the religious welfare of the children-to-be rather than putting pressure on the non-Jew to convert immediately, an important psychological block is removed from the mind of the non-Jew. And, in consequence, the non-Jew often comes into Judaism shortly after the marriage enthusiastically and completely voluntarily, without feeling that in taking this step he or she is being either hypocritical or subservient.

How are the mixed marriages at which I have officiated working out? I have no sure way of knowing. Those couples with whom I have maintained contact have, without exception, kept their commitments and are synagogue-oriented and -affiliated. About the rest, I cannot speak with absolute certainty except to say this:

In every instance I ask the parents of the Jewish bride or groom to let me know if the couple fails to keep the promises made to me. I tell them that this is very important to me because, if my marriage procedure is faulty, I want to know about it.

In all the eighteen years I have lived in New York City, I have had only one adverse report, brought to me several years ago in mid-December by a very irate father. He phoned to tell me that his son and non-Jewish daughter-in-law had disgraced him by putting up a Christmas tree in their living room. When I telephoned to the young man, he readily admitted the truth of the report.

"We are going to keep our promises about the children," he said. "But my wife is from Denmark and, at this time of year, she gets very homesick because Christmas time is a time when all her family return home and she cannot go because I cannot afford to send her. So I felt that the least I could do would be to buy her a Christmas tree to help relieve her feelings of homesickness. And, rabbi, by what kind of logic could I deny her this small personal pleasure? We live here in Brooklyn on an all-Jewish street and more than half the homes on our street have Christmas trees!" By what kind of logic, indeed?

We shall need the forbearance of Moses, the wisdom of Solomon, and the patience of Job to solve all the problems that have come upon us and will continue to come upon us because of the gradually increasing number of religious mixed marriages in these United States of America.
